Chase Talbot focuses his practice on patent, trademark, and copyright matters, assisting clients with intellectual property procurement, enforcement, and litigation. He represents inventors, startups, and established businesses in securing and protecting their innovations, guiding them through all aspects of intellectual property law.

With a background in biochemistry and political science, Chase brings a unique combination of scientific knowledge and legal acumen to his practice. He has worked with clients across various industries, including mechanical systems, life sciences, consumer products, industrial equipment, and emerging technologies. His technical foundation enables him to understand complex inventions and develop effective strategies for patent prosecution, portfolio management, and IP enforcement.

In addition to his prosecution work, Chase advises clients on licensing agreements, non-disclosure and confidentiality agreements, infringement risk assessments, and enforcement actions. He assists clients in responding to office actions and navigating disputes over patent validity and trademark rights. As a registered patent agent with the USPTO, Chase is particularly skilled in crafting strategic patent prosecution approaches that anticipate potential challenges and maximize IP value. He works closely with clients to develop strong intellectual property portfolios that align with their business goals and long-term market strategies. His litigation experience informs his approach to patent drafting, ensuring that his clients' patents are both enforceable and defensible.

Chase is passionate about helping businesses protect their innovations and brands in an increasingly competitive market. He is committed to providing practical, results-driven counsel to help clients leverage their intellectual property for growth and competitive advantage.
